

Bringing Laura to You

I am excited about the prospect of working with you in your lovely studio. I truly enjoy traveling to teach, meeting new people, and experiencing new towns. Before you contact me to schedule a time, please read my guidelines for booking:

- I have a whole menu of workshops that I teach. One of the benefits of bringing me to you is you get to choose what I teach! If you aren't sure what is best for your studio, schedule an appointment with me to chat and we will decide together.
- I recommend adding a day to the front of our time together and have me do some continuing education for your teachers. I can also do a business consult for your studio or for your teachers.
- In order to ensure giving people enough time to create the space in their schedule to attend, I also require that we begin marketing at least 2 months in advance. I will post it on my website and let my peeps know as well.
- My schedule books months in advance so please plan ahead when checking into booking me. Having said that, I occasionally experience cancellations so if you have a date you would like that is soon, ask!
- Payment: My payment is a 35%/65% split of the net income with both yours and my expenses taken into account. I will have a minimum payment that depends on the type of planning and travel I must do. My expenses are travel as well as a per diem, if I am staying overnight. If I am driving, I charge mileage. We will discuss and agree to the minimum payment and allowable expenses before we confirm the date.
- Housing: If my stay includes an overnight, I prefer to stay in a student's home to have access to a kitchen to prepare my own foods. We can discuss this option when it is necessary.
